

Colorado State University Writing Project invites you to the...

NWP Rocky Mountain Regional Conference

When and Where?

The conference will take place
July 12-14 in beautiful Fort Collins, Colorado.

What is Sustainable Teaching?

The process of fostering self-compassion and renewal in educators who support the growth and development of students in turn. Sustainable teaching puts teachers first with the goal of creating a collaborative community that values a balanced approach to education and enables all participants to thrive.

Mind, Body, and Soul:
Finding Your Path toward Sustainable Teaching.

A conference for educators, by educators.

If you still love the profession of education deep down, but just don't know how much longer you can last in it, this is the conference for you!

Hosted by the Colorado State University Writing Project, the conference will be devoted to helping you nourish your mind, body, and soul as an educator by giving you space and time for professional renewal and personal restoration in your community. Explore the concept of sustainable teaching, and learn more from keynote speaker Dr. Marcelle Haddix about expanding self-care work beyond predominantly White, middle-class spaces.

Join us in July 12-14 on the Colorado State University campus in beautiful Fort Collins, Colorado, to learn mindfulness and resiliency practices that will help you stay in the profession for the long haul!

For more information regarding conference submissions and registration, visit: nwprmc.com.